FLUFFY

IN AUSTRALIA

BY MABEL MNENSA

Splash! Fluffy dives into the water at the Great Barrier Reef. The coral sways.

The fish wave their fins. “G’day, mate!” they say, excited to meet a new friend.

Poppy, the octopus, swims closer. She has never seen a bunny.
And definitely not a swimming bunny.

“Why do you need such huge eyes?” Poppy asks.

“These are my goggles so I can see, and this is my snorkel so I can breathe underwater,” Fluffy replies kindly.

“But if you can’t breathe here, what are you doing in the water?”

“I am looking for the perfect place to hide this Cadbury Easter Egg,” says Fluffy.

“Let me show you around,” Poppy offers generously.

Fluffy spots a shipwreck off Moreton Island. “Ah, yeah,” drawls Poppy in her stretchy Australian accent. “These fifteen shipwrecks are the Tangalooma Wrecks. The humans put them here to make a sort of harbour for them to play in.” “Now that’s what I call recycling,” laughs Fluffy.

A voice is coming from inside the Kookaburra. Fluffy and Poppy search under yellow and purple coral. They bump into a clownfish. Oops! They duck under a manta ray.

The voice is coming from a loggerhead turtle. Its legs are stuck in a plastic bag.

“Please help, friends”. Working as a team, Fluffy and Poppy manage to free the turtle.

“I am Finn. Thank you for saving me.” Poppy looks at Fluffy,
“Plastic is bad for the ocean.”

Poppy, Fluffy and Finn pick up loads of litter from inside the ship. But Fluffy can’t leave just yet. He is still looking for the perfect place to hide his Cadbury Easter Egg.

“Fluffy,” says Finn. “Maybe I can help you this time. The Kookaburra is a good hiding place.”

Fluffy nestles his Cadbury Easter Egg into some smooth cauliflower coral. “It’s going to be hard to find,” Fluffy giggles.

He’s had a wonderful day.
